Your Submission to the TPC Review: It is vital that the TPC retains the ability to assess projects free from interference from the government of the day. Without this the public perception of fairness and transparency, and the social licence, for planning decisions will be lost.

In particular the TPC must continue to to assess projects deemed Projects of State Significance, lest the public perception be of inadequate consultation, And opaque deals between developers and government with consequent poor decisions that we will come to bitterly regret (and Tasmania has a sorry history of this). This will engender failure of community acceptance of the decisions made, and continuing public discord.

This is particularly important with proposals that will significantly impact the quality of life of so many Tasmanian's, myself included, such as the Cambria Green and Mt Wellington Cable car proposals, and the building height and scale within Hobart.
